CIA Subsidy Talks Open In Congress

Times-Miami Herald Service

WASHINGTON — Congress began debating yesterday who should fill the vacuum left by the Central Intelligence Agency's (CIA) enforced withdrawal from subsidizing private organizations overseas.

"We think dialogues and confrontations at the international level are important," said Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla. "We want to do it in an open and Democratic way."

Fascell is chairman of the House international organizations and movements subcommittee which opened hearings on a dozen generally similar bills, including his. They were submitted in the uproar after the disclosure that the CIA was secretly footing the bill for private groups to represent the U.S. abroad

Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y., asked if the activities of private groups would be prejudiced by any federal aid "open or clandestine."
